

Much Ado About One Side

*Come, palindove, let edges twine;
thy side is mine, and mine is thine.*

*Draw, O coward! cries the knight.
So inkhands draw him at halfheight.
That halfknight draws a quarterknight,
who draws a knightling, out of sight.
This swordfeud, quoth one, is accursed:
each little inkprick's like the first!
Take sides! they roar. The turncoat sighs:
I have but one. Do thou likewise.*

*Split it, then! Slit it lengthwise through:
it comes round doublelong, not two.
Then who's our foe? Thy mirrorknave.
Look edgewise: that's thine own swordwave.*

*Onesided! End it! The strip shrugs: Fine.
Tail dovetails head; mine's thine, thine's mine:
come, palindove, let edges twine...*

↺ The layout places the final ellipsis beside the opening "Come," so the inscription has no fixed end.
